TITLE: Men to learn from Women's Manliness in Response to COVID-19: A Feminist post-structuralist Discourse Analysis

ABSTRACT: This study is a multiperspectival analysis using Critical Discourse Analysis in combination with feminist poststructuralist discourse analysis and framing theory to trace the construction of gender identities in an article titled "Leadership Matters: The PM should take his cue from women leaders" (Khan, 2020) published in the daily Dawn on 18.4.2020. in the COVID-19 context. The theoretical framework was drawn from Fairclough's latest revised model (2017) for critique in combination with feministic poststructuralist discourse analysis and the Frame Problem Tool of Gee (2014). The results revealed that the article writer juxtaposes male and female heads of states through four frames namely: strength vs. weakness; decisiveness vs. indecisiveness; action vs. procrastination and narcissism vs. altruism/magnanimity. Ironically for the conventional audience, but keeping with the poststructuralists' stand of identities being fluid, the author ascribes three of the stereotypical manly qualities to the female statesmen and one to male leaders in view of their respective responses to the crisis. This study proposes that this discourse was initiated due to some extraordinary responses of the male and female leaders with a purpose to inform men, especially the Pakistan Prime Minister, of the right course of action. The analysis also presents recommendations for action.

Catatan Reviewer tentang Artikel:

Notes for the author:

1. The description of the Darw Daily is still too short so the readers cannot comprehensively understand the media profile that publishes the article which become focus of this research. For example, how many copies and readers, relations with the writer (Khan), and its relationship with the Pakistani government, including its affiliations with other media in other countries (outside Pakistan). Understanding about profiles like this will help you as author to understand why the article titled "Leadership Matters" can be published in that media (Darm Daily)
2. A profile of the author of the article or writer (Ayesha Ijaz Khan) is important to be mentioned, like her profession and activities so far. Other things that should be mentioned also are how his views on gender and leadership seen from his previous writings (in addition to writing about "Leadership Matters" in Darm Daily) and the relationship between Khan and Pakistani PM currently. Those things are important to understand the context of the writer's critics (Khan) against male leaders such as Prime Minister of England, Boris Johnson, American President, Donald Trump, and Prime Minister of Pakistan, Imran Khan in handling Covid 19 issues in their own country.
